Myanmar refugees face arbitrary arrest, alleged extortion in Thailand

Fortify Rights calls on Thailand to investigate the recent destruction by its soldiers of a makeshift cross-border footbridge used by refugees fleeing deadly attacks in eastern Myanmar. Video footage filmed from the Myanmar side of the border shows uniformed Thai soldiers destroying a footbridge over the Wa Le River which connects Thailand's Tak Province with Myanmar's war-torn Karen State. New evidence also implicates Thai authorities in arbitrarily arresting and allegedly extorting refugees in the border town of Mae Sot. "The Thai authorities should ensure any investigation into the situation on the border is aimed at protecting refugee rights, not further violating them," said Amy Smith, Executive Director at Fortify Rights. Student activist denied bail, detained in remand prison

Student activist Sophon Surariddhidhamrong was denied bail by the Ratchadapisek Criminal Court. He will be detained at Bangkok Remand Prison. Thai Lawyers for Human Rights (TLHR) said that the Court denied him bail because he was previously granted bail on a contempt of court charge resulting from a protest at the Criminal Court to demand the right to bail for detained activists. Sophon was arrested on a royal defamation and a violation of the Sound Amplifier Act charges for giving a speech during a protest march in the Ratchadamneon area on 22 April.

Opinion

The State of Thailand's Deep South Insurgency (Uday)

The insurgency in Thailand's 'Deep South' which covers the provinces of Pattani, Yala, Narathiwat, and parts of Songkhla has been ongoing for decades. Insurgents from the minority Malay-Muslim community have demanded autonomy from Buddhist-majority Thailand. As per the constitution, Thailand is "indivisible". They were previously part of the Sultanate of Patani. The Malay-Muslim population in the Deep South is culturally and historically closer to the Malays across the border. The conflict is motivated by this history. Thailand has generally taken a heavy security-based approach in the Deep South. There have been human rights violations by both sides. The trend of violence has ebbed and flowed over the years. Between January 2004 and October 2021, at least 7,294 people have been killed and 13,550 have been injured. The latest peace talks, from 2019/2020, involve Barisan Revolusi Nasional (PDNI) and Bangkok. However, violence has continued despite the talks. There have been unverified claims of Thai militants produced by the produced and serious produced by the produced and serious produced by the prod to establish a presence and be operationally capable in the Deep South in the current conditions. The extremist or IS-level-radicalised subset of the Thai insurgents is very small. The nature of the Deep South conflict is not going to change anytime soon. In time, there could be some groups in line with IS or similar ideologies, but for that, the current conditions will have to change. The idea of the Sultanate of Patani is stronger than that of a global caliphate. Pro-IS groups will continue their propaganda targeting Thailand though and try to get more local support. The violence in the Deep South is going to continue regardless, as a political resolution is still difficult to see for the foreseeable future. [Militant Wire, 02.05]

New Envoy to Steer Thailand's Response to Myanmar Crisis (Editorial)

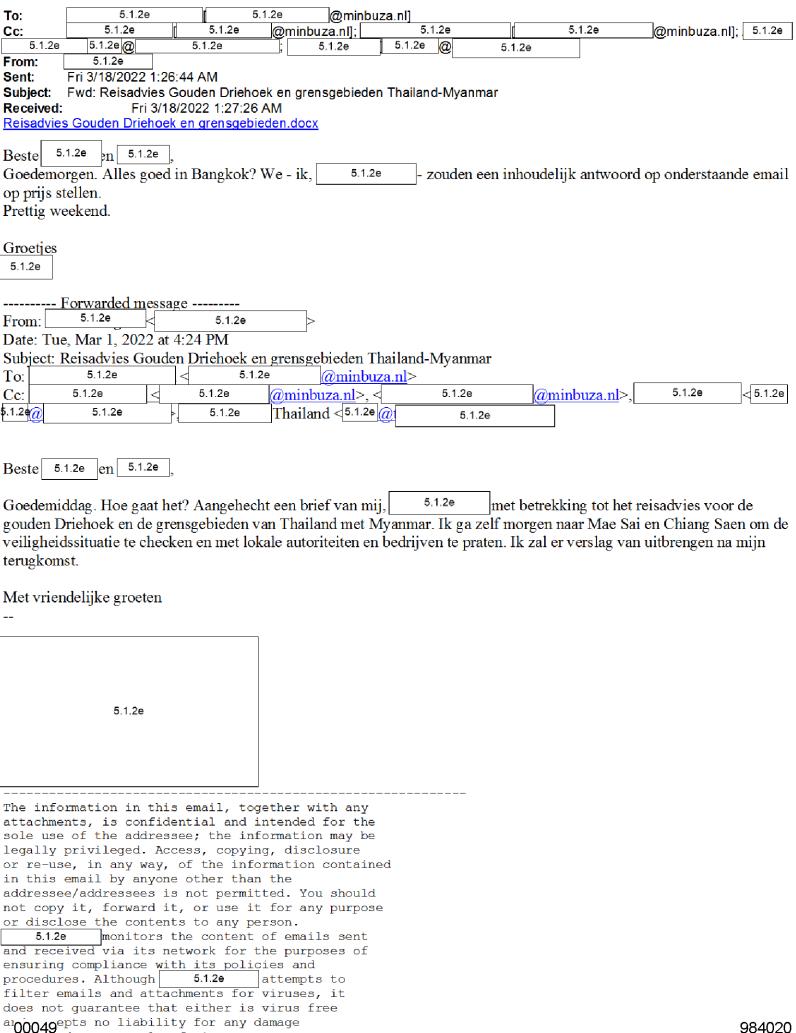

The already long list of governments and blocs to have appointed a special envoy to crisis-torn Myanmar has grown with the Thai Foreign Ministry's designation of Pornpimol "Pauline" Kanchanalak, an adviser to the Thai foreign minister, as Bangkok's special envoy for relations with Myanmar. It is still unclear what mandate the Thai special envoy has been given. Last week, Don, who also serves as deputy prime minister, said Pornpimol was given the post in part due to her extensive knowledge of the neighboring country. It is not clear, however, whether she has visited Myanmar recently, and little is known about her knowledge of the country's complex political situation or the web of ethnic conflicts that has long beset military-ruled Myanmar. Don told the Bangkok Post that while Pornpimol has already played a key role as a ministry adviser, herability to join discussions with high-ranking foreign officials has been limited. Her new position will lift those curbs, he said, adding that such appointments are common in the European Union. Myanmar has closed all checkpoints along the Thai border since April 23, when a car bomb exploded near the Myanmar entrance to the Thai-Myanmar Friendship Bridge, in Myawaddy, Karen State, opposite Thailand's Mae Sot. In any case, Thailand is a key neighbor of Myanmar and the appointment of Pornpimol could signal that Bangkok is looking to play along with like-minded actors on the complicated Myanmar issue. It will also be playing a key role in distributing humanitarian assistance from the US and other Western countries to Myanmar refugees on the border, as the violence continues to escalate across the frontier and Myanmar continues to descend into chaos and instability. As it does, it appears likely from Don's comments that he has entrusted Pornpimol to guide his ministry's policies on Myanmar. [The Irrawaddy, 02.05]

Asean tackling aid for Myanmar people (Kavi Chongkittavorn)

On May 6, the Asean special envoy to Myanmar, the Cambodian Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister, Prak Sokhonn, is holding a high-level platform for Asean to kick off a multi-stakeholder dialogue and to find the best practical ways to provide the grouping's humanitarian assistance to Myanmar. The meeting is part of the implementation of the five-point consensus agreed last April by Asean. The one-day meeting will be attended by senior officials from all Asean members as well as other specialised UN agencies and civil society organisations. The purpose is to jump-start a multi-stakeholder dialogue to come up with recommendations to guide Asean's humanitarian assistance to Myanmar in the weeks and months to come. At the Phnom Penh meeting, Thailand, as Myanmar's eastern neighbour with a 2,401-kilometre common border, will have an important role to play as, because of its location, it will be serving as a hub for humanitarian assistance. Since the coup, the Thai authorities have been exploring possible cooperation with various partners and stakeholders to address the humanitarian crisis in Myanmar in a comprehensive manner. So far, the assistance has been confined to the border areas and to those who fled across to Thailand. [Bangkok Post]

Reading between the digital lines (Adviser for the Communication and Information unit at UNESCO Bangkok)

On this year's World Press Freedom Day -- which falls today -- it's clear that our current relationship with information has undergone a profound change from the norms of only a generation ago. Today it is undeniable that the technological developments of such mediated information have contributed substantially to the proliferation of misinformation online. This ultimately has the effect of distancing public trust from traditional media. This scenario also has a direct impact on the status of freedom of expression across the world, in which the digital realm makes possible both new opportunities and new threats for free expression. Digital technology indeed has enabled new forms of free communication that rely on encrypted content, coded language, and memes which indirectly express ideas that would be normally prohibited under authoritarian regimes. This trend was, however, rapidly quelled by the blocking of specific sites and the government's use of advanced surveillance mechanisms. Information-seeking now represents half of all online activities among worldwide users. As the world increasingly depends on sophisticated digital tools to access news, users' understanding of the digital realm will have great social implications. As much as laws and regulations are necessary to protect freedom of expression and free access to information, greater public awareness of these issues is essential if we're to safeguard a truly autonomous and free media industry. Workshop to explain the full range of U.S.-Thai bilateral cooperation in the region

Low-Medium

On Tuesday the U.S. Embassy partnered with Thai Journalists Association started a three-day workshop to explain US foreign policy in the region and to give journalists an insight into the full range of U.S.-Thai bilateral cooperation. Journalists will learn about U.S.-Thai security, economic, environment, law enforcement, and health cooperation and about the visa operations and cultural exchanges that strengthen our people-to-people ties. U.S. Embassy Charge d'Affaires Michael Heath said that this seminar marks the first collaborative effort of its kind between the U.S. Embassy and TJA, and I am thrilled the participating journalists will spend the next few days learning more about how staff from across the U.S. Embassy partner with their Thai counterparts every day to advance our mutual interests. Like we do across the world, the United States will continue to support a vibrant, free press which keeps us informed, prevents the spread of mis and dis-information, and serves as a cornerstone of democracy.

Political gatherings to continue throughout November

Low-Medium

Political gatherings are likely to continue through November at Klong Prem Central Prison and the Supreme Court in Bangkok to demand the release of detained pro-democracy activists. At Klong Prem Central Prison the gatherings are scheduled for 4pm and at the Supreme Court 5pm or 5.30pm. Other protests are ongoing at Tha Phae Gate or Chiang Mai University at 5pm. Expect disruptions to traffic around these locations. We advise you to avoid these areas if possible.

MFP say court decision will raise political tension

Low-Medium

Following the Constitutional Court ruling on Wednesday that three activists attempted to overthrow the state and monarchy the Move Forward Party (MFP) said in a press conference yesterday the decision may raise political tension because the government would use the decision to suppress freedom of speech to resolve lese majeste law. The judgement may result in an extreme political polarisation. The MFP insisted that to resolve political tension the truth must be explored. Meanwhile, on Thursday the government warned protesters not to defy the charter court's decision citing any actions could threaten the constitutional monarchy. Protesters must comply with the court's ruling and order and can no longer cite their rights and freedoms as previously did and must be more careful in future.

Truckers protest on 16 November update

Low-Medium

In similar news, at least 1,000 truck drivers plan to drive their vehicles on main routes and highways in Bangkok and neighbouring provinces on 16 November, calling for the government to cap diesel prices at 25 Thai baht per litre for at least one year. As of yet no specific times have been announced by the 00052 is a specific times. The Transport Federation of Thailand (LTFT) says more drivers will participate than 984030

Court rules activists tried to overthrow state and monarchy

Low-Medium

Following up on yesterday's story, the Const	titutional Court ruled that 5.1.2e
and 5.1.2e tried to ov	verthrow the state and the monarchy during a protest at
Thammasat University Rangsit campus in E	Bangkok on 10 August last year and several times afterwards. The activist listed their demands in a manifesto at the events calling for monarchy reform and the end of the lese majesty law. Judges ruled this violated the constitution and ordered them to end their movement. Of the eight people na	amed in the petition the court ruled that only 5.1.2e
5.1.2e were involved in	the incidents, all denying wrongdoing. The decision will likely lead to the Election Commission decide	ding whether to move for the disbandment of the Move
Forward Party who the opposition believe s	supported the protests.

UN urges Thailand to amend the lese majeste law

Low-Medium

A UN Human Rights Council working group on Wednesday urged Thailand to amend the lese majeste law by some member states giving the reason it restricts freedom of expression. Anyone convicted for defaming, insulting or threatening the monarchy can see prison sentences of up to 15 years. Thai officials responded that it protects the monarch and national security, and that cases were handled carefully. Since anti-government protests started last year, at least 156 people, including 13 youths, have been charged with lese majeste. The UN countries that called for the government to review or amend the law were Belgium, Canada, Finland, France, Germany, Norway, Sweden and Switzerland. The US said it was concerned by the expanded use of the lese majeste law and its impact on freedom of expression.

Justice Ministry to amend how criminal records are stored

Low-Medium

The Justice Ministry will look at updating how criminal records are stored on a database to help clear the names of ex-convicts and avoid human right abuses after the National Human Rights Commission found it was causing problems for them to get jobs after their sentences. Some had been refused work because employers can look up their criminal history. Meanwhile, 5.1.2e director of the Office of Justice Affairs, urged for legal changes to how police record fingerprints citing suspect fingerprints going through the court system must be stored in a separate database following final judgement of their case and completion of sentence. The Office of Justice
Affairs will look at which criminal records can be revealed, stored or finally deleted

Goedemiddag. Hoe gaat het? Alvast vooruitlopend op onze ontmoeting volgende maand heb ik een paar vragen over onderstaande informatie in het reisadvies:

Grensgebied met Myanmar

Reis niet naar de streek ten noorden van Thailand aan de grens met Laos in de staat Shan (de Gouden Driehoek), het grensgebied tussen Mae Sai en Laos. Hier zijn drugsbendes actief.

Oranje: alleen noodzakelijke reizen

Grensgebied met Myanmar

Wees alert als u in het grensgebied met Myanmar reist. Met name in de provincies Mae Hong Son en Tak komen gewelddadige incidenten voor tussen Thaise veiligheidsautoriteiten en in het gebied actieve criminele organisaties.

Wat is de feitelijke onderbouwing voor dit verhaal?

Wat is de bron?

Dank en hartelijke groetjes

New testing centre opens in capital

A new Covid-19 testing centre will be on the first floor of Car Park Building B at the government complex on Chaeng Watthana Road and is set to operate starting from Tuesday to 21 January, said Deputy Prime Minister and Public Health Minister Anutin Charnvirakul on Sunday. [Bangkok Post]

The updates to the Thailand Pass have now officially been published in the Royal Gazette. I read it twice and I saw no mention of a [15 January] cut-off date. The way I read it is that Test & Go people, who already have a QR Code, can continue to enter #Thailand until further notice. [Richard Barrow]

Omicron cases likely undetected

More than 30% of Covid-19 infections in Thailand are believed to be of the Omicron variant, says virologist Yong Poovorawan of the Centre of Excellence in Clinical Virology at Chulalongkorn University. He said that in every country, the reported number of Omicron infections is lower than the actual number due to a lack of variant identification efforts. Meanwhile, the Department of Disease Control (DDC) has indicated the Delta variant is still the dominant strain in Thailand and accounts for 70–80% of cases. [Bangkok Post, 09.01]

Tuesday opening of new sandbox provinces confirmed

The three southern provinces of Surat Thani, Krabi and Phangnga will start accepting people flying in from abroad under the sandbox formula on Tuesday. The date was confirmed in the announcement of the Royal Gazette published on Saturday. Visitors have to follow the same protocol as the sandbox in Phuket, which requires one RT-PCR test upon their arrival at registered hotels and another five or six days later. [Bangkok Post, 09.01]

Ministry jab plan for this year gets nod

The Centre for Covid-19 Situation Administration (CCSA) has approved the Public Health Ministry's vaccination plan for this year which includes the inoculation of 9.3 million people this month. The CCSA has also approved a fourth booster shot against Covid-19

f00055 lical workers and people with underlying health conditions. [Bangkok Post, 08.01]

The government has prepared doses of the Pfizer-BioNTech Covid-19 vaccine for children between the ages of 5-11, deputy government spokeswoman Rachada Dhnadirek said on Saturday. The vaccination drive for those aged 5-11 is expected to begin next month, according to the Public Health Ministry. The Education Ministry is taking a voluntary survey to gauge the demand. [Bangkok Post, 08.01]

Politics

Can Thaksin secure a pardon?

Thaksin Shinawatra, who was ousted as prime minister in a 2006 coup and now lives in exile, has recently been expressing his wish to return to Thailand. During an online chat hosted by the Care group on social app Clubhouse last week, the 72-year-old once again discussed ending his self-imposed expulsion and returning to his homeland as "a gift for Thais". However, Thaksin faces a total of 12 years in prison over corruption and abuse-of-power convictions stemming from his two terms as premier, prompting speculation that Thaksin is aiming to secure a pardon as a ticket home. [Bangkok Post]

Thaksin hit by storm that could sink Thailand's main opposition party

Former prime minister Thaksin Shinawatra is seen by most neutral observers as the de-facto leader and patriarch of opposition party Pheu Thai. But the party has always insisted it is free from the influence of the wealthy ex-PM, who has been self-exiled overseas since fleeing a 2008 corruption conviction he claims was politically motivated. Officially, Thaksin is neither an executive nor even a member of Pheu Thai. However, fresh allegations of his political influence are now threatening to kill off Thailand's main opposition party. The Political Parties Act prohibits any non-member from influencing a party's affairs directly or indirectly. Parties who violate the law face disbandment by the Constitutional Court. [Thai PBS World, 09.01]

Will the PM dissolve the House?

PM Prayut Chan-o-cha has said many times that he does not have any intention of dissolving the House of Representatives before two organic laws related to the election system are amended, and he intends to remain in his job to host the Apec Summit 2022. He has also vowed to complete his term. Nevertheless, as one political expert who spoke to the Bangkok Post recently believes, questions remain over a number of political conundrums expected this year. [Bangkok Post]

Most expect Prayut to stay in power throughout 2022: poll

Most people believe Gen Prayut Chan-o-cha will remain in power throughout the year while the political situation will be as chaotic as in 2021, according to an opinion survey by the National Institute of Development Administration, or Nida Poll. On the political situation, the highest number of respondents - 46.34% - said they believed it would remain as chaotic as in 2021; 34.72% thought it would be even more chaotic; 10.04% believed it would be less chaotic; and 3.77% expected calm. The rest, 5.13%, had no answer or were not interested. [Bangkok Post, 09.01]

Viral lies spread democratic decay from Thailand to Nepal: report

When fake photos and COVID conspiracies spiral across social media, critics invariably ask how to protect people from the dregs of the internet. But a new report on disinformation in Asia suggests that focusing on technology misses the point and that a crackdown on tech may treat the symptom, not the disease. The report, How Information Disorder Affirms Authoritarianism and Destabilizes Democracy, was released last month by USAID. Regulation alone isn't a solution, the report says. Lasting fixes, it says, would get to the roots of both supply and demand of disinformation. On the demand side, this includes tackling inequality, which breeds distrust in the establishment. On the supply side, it includes strengthening institutions like an independent judiciary and press to counter actors who spread lies online to gain political influence. [Nikkei Asian Review, 09.01]

Kla leader dares to be different

The Kla Party will field candidates in all upcoming by-elections, seeing the contests as an opportunity to reach out to voters ahead of the general election, even if its chances of winning are slim. Kla leader Korn Chatikavanij said the party's best hope in the three by-elections lies with secretary-general Atavit Suwannapakdee who is running in Bangkok's Constituency 9, which covers Laksi district and part of Chatuchak. [Bangkok Post, 08.01]

Myanmar

Suu Kyi Sentenced to 4 More Years in Prison Over Walkie-Talkies, Covid Limits

A court in Myanmar sentenced ousted leader Aung San Suu Kyi to four more years in prison on Monday after finding her guilty of illegally importing and possessing walkie-talkies and violating coronavirus restrictions, a legal official said. Suu Kyi was convicted last month on two other charges and given a four-year prison sentence, which was then halved by the head of the military-installed government. The cases are among about a dozen brought against the 76-year-old Nobel Peace Prize laureate since the army seized power last February, ousting her elected government. [Bloomberg]

200 Myanmar villagers flee to Thai border amid new fighting

More than 200 Myanmar villagers have begun amassing near the Thai border in Mae Hong Son's Muang district amid news of a possible air strike and renewed fighting between rebel and junta forces. Since Friday, the villagers have been gathering near a Thai military post, as they are barred from crossing the border, a source said on Saturday. [Bangkok Post, 09.01]

Myanmar's junta invites resistance forces to join ceasefire talks

The military junta in Naypyidaw has asked the country's resistance forces to join ceasefire talks and to work together to deliver effective humanitarian assistance to the needy people of Myanmar. According to a joint press statement, released on the first of a 100055, visit by ASEAN Chair and Cambodian prime minister Hun Sen, the ceasefire will be extended for the rest of this year.
